B.W.L. Sponsors Program Lemon Grove Day at the Fair

Next Sunday is Lemon Grove Day

Sunday is Lemon Grove Day at the San Diego County Fair!

A program to be presented in front of the grandstand at the new main stage is sponsored by the Business Women's League of Lemon Grove as follows:

Highland Fling, Miss Agnes Woodhead, accompanied by Archie McKeller on the bagpipes.

Three dance numbers by Sonka Dance pupils accompanied by Mrs. Grace Toomire:

Tap dance—Bonnie Jean Halstrom, Susan Hobson.

Tumblers — Judson and Jim Bowers.

Baton Twirlers—Cecelia Lyons, Gloria Jones, Sally Thibault, Lemon Grove School.

Intermediate Choir, First Congregational Church, directed by Mrs. Toomire, accompanied by Mrs. Hensley.

Ballet—Bobby Jo Seigelman, from Allied Academies of the Dance.

Acrobats — Nancy Sunbury, Janice Holstrom, Susan Hobson, Janice Sunbury of Myra Sonka Dance Group.

Highland Fling.

Girl Scout Day Camp

Girls, would you like to have fun? Then go camping with the Girl Scouts July 25, 26, 27, 28, August 1, 2, 3, 4, at Eucalyptus Park. Any girl whether a Girl Scout or not, between the ages of 7 and 15 years, may make reservations with the registrar, Mrs. Harry Fisher, 4003 Violet, H 6-5737. The Camp fee of $2.50 includes transportation.

A new plan has been formulated with the Brownie, Fly-Ups, Intermediates and Seniors all meeting at the same time, with each age level in units.

"Indians" is the theme of the camp. Mrs. I. J. Johnson, director of Intermediates, helped complete plans for the program at a meeting, Friday. Campers will make Indian natural pottery, buddie burners from tin cans, tie dye hankies, do copper work, make bracelets and belts from aluminum and do wood carving. Cook-outs and hiking are also on the program.

Serving with Mrs. Johnston will be Mrs. John Kish, as program director. Unit Directors and co-Directors are Mmes Donald Taylor, Paul Sloan, R. E. Johnston, V. R. Huffman, Geo. Hollihan and Harry Jennison. Miss Mary Ann Hallihan, will serve as program aid.

Gals Gab Too Much But are Safe

The Automobile Club of Southern California labeled the typical woman driver in California "chatty, excitable, but far less deadly on the highway than the average male motorist."

Moreover, she has greater field of vision, is more cautious in traffic, and is much less likely to earn a police citation than her male counterpart.

These were findings of the Club's Public Safety Department, resulting from a recent analysis to determine driving characteristics of female motorists.

JAS. BARKER, 2nd Lieut.

Capt. and Mrs. E. F. Barker, 7591 Central, left Friday for Ft. Riley, Kans., to see their son, Officer Candidate James Barker, receive his bars for Second Lieutenant. He will return with his parents and on July 16 be married to Miss Matta Colquhoun of American Homes.

Hi, Neighbor

by Mae Rer Graham

Now that it has been definitely decided that Lemon Grove is to have a Powow, and every one is getting in line to make it a real Hi Neighbor, Welcome Stranger event, we should start cleaning house for the company that will be coming.

We boast that Lemon Grove is the healthiest spot in God's Country. To have health you must have cleanliness and any one will agree, especially folk with hay fever, that weeds and litter along the streets and on vacant lots, are not only an eyesore but a menace.

Our Fire Commissioners might have some comments to make, too, on the danger of dry weeds and trash.

Perhaps our Chamber of Commerce could call for a Clean-Up day.

Lion's and Kiwanians and Y's Men, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and Camp Fire Girls and all the rest of you Hi Neighbors, please take note, and it's possible we could make our Lemon Grove be known as the Healthiest City because it is the cleanest spot on the Coast.

All you folks up and down Main street and Imperial, and Broadway clear out to Radio Road—will you give a helping hand.

Begonia Society at Lowry Home

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Lowry, 3780 Massachusetts, will receive the La Mesa Branch, American Begonia Society, at a pot luck dinner at 6:30 p. m. Monday, this being the first garden meeting of the summer. Each person is asked to bring his own table service.

Mrs. C. C. Updyke, vice-president, will preside at the business meeting in the absence of the president, Mrs. E. F. Barker.

Mrs. R. D. Hayhurst will discuss "Culture of Chrysanthemums."

HAS APPENDECTOMY

Sgt. Jefferson D. Goulette, III U. S. Marines, son of Capt. and Mrs. J. D. Goulette, Jr., 4434 Palm avenue, underwent an appendectomy at San Diego Naval Hospital Thursday evening. He is recuperating nicely.

Standing of Clubs in Twilight League

Six boys' teams, as Juniors of the Twilight Softball League, will play at 5:30 p. m. every Monday, Wednesday andn Friday preceding the regular evening games at Lyles Field, La Mesa.

The Lemon Grove Padres (local junior team) played La Mesa Grammar school yesterday.

Standings of the teams:

	W	L
Comanche Bowl	3	1
Kappa Sigma	3	1
G.M.K. Jorgerson	2	1
Howerton Plumbers	2	1
Lemon Grove Merchants	1	3
La Mesa V.F.W.	0	3

Schedule for this week:

Thursday night, 8:15—Mt. Helix Laundry Girls vs La Mesa Lumber Co. Girls.

Friday night, 8:15—Crown Carpet vs Anderson Furniture Co.

Saturday, Lemon Grove Merchants vs La Mesa V.F.W.

Raymond Johnston, 7112½ Central, was unanimously chosen last week as this week's leading baseball player for the La Mesa League. Raymond plays catcher for the Lemon Grove Merchant's team, which is sponsored by several of the merchants of Lemon Grove under the auspices of the Y's Men's Club.

Each week some member of the League is chosen for his or her outstanding work on the diamond, both in personal ability and in team co-operation. Raymond has been with the Lemon Grove Merchant's team since it was formed four years ago.

Whiskerino is Powow Feature

All You HE Men!

Take Notice!

Start raising those whiskers now or suffer dire consequences come the days of the Powow

It has been decreed and written into the record that all He men in this community shall raise some semblance of beard, sideburn, mustachio, goatee or mutton chops before the opening day of Powow August 17, in the year 1950.

Any man that fails to show a proper facial adornment shall be hailed before a court of his peers and justice meted out as the court sees fit.

Take heed, Men!

Boy Scout Summer Program

Several major summer activities are now keeping Boy Scouts of the San Diego Area Council busy, with summer camp at Cuyamaca the most popular choice among San Diego Scout units.

Thirty Troops have registered for Camp Hual-Cu-Cuish sessions so far, according to an announcement from the Council headquarters. The camp is currently in its second week of operation.

Dr. Paul R. Brust, camping and acticities chairman for the Council, reports that registrations are still be accepted for the fourth and fifth sessions of Scout camp, July 16 through 22 and July 23 through July 29.

The Explorer Committee of the San Diego Area Council is sponsoring a two-week, 100-mile pack trip through the back country of Yosemite National Park, August 18 to September 2, with 100 Explorer Scouts and leaders expected to make the trip.

A staff of experts in mountain packing will take the group through rarely seen glacier-scarred valleys, trout-filled streams and 12,000-foot high mountains. The expedition is especially designed to combine fun and adventure with advancement requirements.

Cost per Explorer for the Yosemite trek has been kept to a bare minimum, totalling $32.54 for the two weeks, including transportation, food, burros, and equipment. Reservations may be made at Scout Headquarters.

Another outstanding summer activity got underway at the Scout pool Balboa Park, on Wednesday when free swimming instruction began for all classes of swimmers.

Instruction will be given each morning throughout July and August by qualified Red Cross swimming experts, headed by John Bishop, advisor for Explorer Post 4, La Jolla. General swims at the Scout pool will continue as in the past every Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoon, 1:30 to 3:30 p. m., and Saturdays at 10:30 a. m. to noon and 1:30 to 3:30 p. m.

Five new Scout units have registered during the month of June, bringing the total number of units in the Council to 241 Cub Packs, Scout Troops and Explorer posts.

The new units are Explorer Post 11, Memorial District, sponsored by the Men's Council of the First Baptist Church, 930 Tenth Ave., L. M. Scouter, advisor; Scoup Troop 10, Balboa District, sponsored by the Hillcrest Lions Club, H. E. Chandler, Scoutmaster; Troop 132, North Shore District, sponsored by the Midway Kiwanis Club, A. E. Estes, Scoutmaster; Troop 168, Grossmont District, sponsored St. John of the Cross Holy Name Society, Lemon Grove, Thomas Brown, Scoutmaster; and Cub Pack 85, San Luis Rey District sponsored by the Solana Beach Community Presbyterian Church, Wilford Kinsey Jr., Cubmaster.

Postal Revenue Shows Growth

That Lemon Grove is growing, and fast, is indicated in the increase in the postal business at the local office during the past six months

The office had a 47% increase during the first six months of 1950 over a like period last year. The figures:

1950	$17,379.47
1949	11,800.92
Increase	5,578.55

The people of Lemon Grove can further increase the business, and place this office in first class if they will all buy their stamps and other postal requirements here.

It is necessary to do a $40,000 a year business to become a first class office. Doing $23,000 during the next six months will give the local office the necessary total.

It is up to the people of the community.

New Owners at Shopping Center

Paul E. Hendrick and E. C. Adams took over the Lemon Grove Shopping Center from Ray Adlfinger last Saturday morning.

Mr. Adams is owner of the Adams Turkey Ranch just off Imperial. Mr. Hendricks is an experienced market operator.

The owners plan to give the public the best in groceries, meats and vegetables.

Stove Installed at the Center

A gas range has been installed in the kitchen of the Community Center.

Funds furnished by the Business Women's League supplied the money for the purchase, which was done by a committee from the Control Board.

The Director of Public Works has not yet voiced his approval of the set of rules adopted by the Control Board at its meeting June 20.

LADIES AID PICNIC

The Ladies Aid of the Lutheran Church will meet at a picnic luncheon promptly at noon on July 20 in Balboa Park. Members, their families and friends are urged to attend.

C of C Endorses the Powow

The directors of the Lemon Grove Chamber of Commerce went on record Wednesday evening as endorsing the Powow.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"The Board endorses the Powow to be held August 17, 18 and 19, and authorizes and directs the Special Events Committee to represent the Chamber of Commerce in co-operating with the other civic organizations of Lemon Grove."

The board also directed that a letter be sent to the Grossmont Union High School Board suggesting the name of Mesa-Grove for the new high school to be built on University avenue at the west edge of La Mesa.

Mrs. T. A. Keeton, president of the P. T.A., has sent a letter to the high school board suggesting the names University High and Western High.

Other citizens of the community are urged to send letters to the board offering suggestions for a name.

Baptist Church Sells Property

The First Baptist Church of Lemon Grove has sold its property at School Lane and Central to John and Stella Thomas.

The property, known as the Educational Unit, will continue to be used by the Church for the present.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas bought the property for an investment.

HAS OPERATION

Mrs. Roy Butler, Jr., 2333 El Prado, underwent a major operation at Mercy Hospital last Thursday. She expects to be brought home Friday but will be confined to her bed for two weeks. Mrs. Butler's many friends wish her a speedy recovery.

A BIG FISH STORY

John A. van Gilse had a good fish story to tell last week when he caught several big ones. However, seeing is believing, so if Van tells you he caught one weighing 28 lbs. 8 oz., you can believe it, for the Review editor saw it.

Attend Red Cross Aquatic School: Schedule of Swimming Lessons at Gillespie Pool

Mrs. Jay Hopper, 3224 Massachusetts, returned Friday from Catalina Island where she completed a 10-day course of training in water safety and related subjects at the Red Cross aquatic school. Mrs. Hopper attended as a delegate of the Lemon Grove Red Cross branch and will serve as swimming instructor for Gillespie pool.

The national aquatic school from which Mrs. Hopper is returning is one of six in the Pacific Area offering 10 days of intensified study to train young men and women in all phases of water skills, first aid and accident prevention. The course is designed to provide the nation's cities with qualified aquatic instructors for its swimming pools, beaches, summer playgrounds, youth organizations and public service groups and schools in the Red Cross campaign to make "Every American a swimmer—every swimmer a life saver!"

The Catalina National Red Cross Aquatic school was directed by Herb Knight who has been associated with National Aquatic schools for many years and serves as San Diego County Water Safety Director. Members of the Red Cross national staff and other experts in special fields served as volunteer faculty members.

Emphasis was placed on skills, teaching techniques and methods for integrating these skills into community life.

In the 28th year of operation, approximately 4000 recreational instructors will complete training courses in 30 aquatic schools throughout the nation.

This is just one of many worthy projects provided by the American Red Cross in its local program.

Swimming lessons for boys and girls of the area will start next Tuesday at Gillespie Pool, sponsored by the American Red Cross and the County Recreation Department.

This program will not in any way interfere with the general public swim time. Anyone interested in Junior or Senior Life Saving classes may contact the pool supervisor.

Girls must wear bathing caps (no bandanas). Classes for Lemon Grove girls will be on Tuesdays only as follows:

9:20-10:00 a. m.—Beginners, 9 to 12 years.
10:00-10:40 a. m.—Beginners, 9 to 12 years.
10:40-11:20 a. m.—Beginners, 9 to 12 year.
10:40-11:20 a. m.—Intermediates, 9 to 12 years.
11:20-12:00 a. m.—Beginners, 13 years and over.
11:20-12:00 a. m.—Intermediates, 13 years and over.
11:20-12:00 a. m.—Advanced, 13 years and over.

Classes for boys from Lemon Grove will be on Thursday only as follows:

9:20-10:00 a. m.—Beginners 9 to 12 years.
10:00-10:40 a. m.—Beginners, 9 to 12 years.
10:40-11:20 a. m.—Beginners, 9 to 12 years.
10:40-11:20 a. m.—Intermediates, 9 to 12 years.
11:20-12:00 a. m.—Beginners 13 years and over.
11:20-12:00 a. m.—Intermediates, 13 years and over.
11:20-12:00 a. m.—Advanced, 13 years and over.

Summer Play Program Starts

Judging by the registrations, the summer recreation program at Lemon Grove School will be well attended. In ages from kindergarten through fourth grade, 102 children registered with 37 in fifth through eighth grades.

Vista La Mesa School, having a smaller territory, has shown a good percentage of 65, at noon today.

Those in charge wish to emphasize the fact that this project is not a child care service, but a program of supervised play and handwork.

Parents are requested to come with the children for registering to help fill out the blanks.

Older children are urged to register as the director wishes to form teams for the games.

Any mothers who will volunteer to help at Lemon Grove School are requested to call Mr. Poluzzi, H 6-5754.

Installs Union Officials in Orange

Mr. and Mrs. Ted Magnusson, 2828 Massachusetts, were in Santa Ana Saturday evening, where Mr. Magnusson, as State vice-president of the Carpenter's Union, installed officers of the Orange County District Council, four local Unions of the county and the Ladies Auxiliary.

Following the ceremony the Union Carpenters of Orange County presented an iron lung to the Orange County Health Department for use in polio work.

RECUPERATING AT MOME

Mrs. John P. Baker, 1681 Drexel, underwent an operation at Los Mesa Hospital Monday. She is at home now and recuperating nicely. Mrs. Baker is the genial waitress in the Sugar Plum and is greatly missed by the patrons. Her many friends wish her a speedy recovery.

ADVANTAGES OF DRY CLIMATE

One good effect of the semi-arid climate of California has been discovered. Aridity may restrict plant diseases caused by water-disseminated fungi to their underground phases, relates Dr. W. C. Snyder and Dr. K. F. Baker, plant pathologists on the Berkeley campus and Los Angeles campus, respectively, of the University of California.

Blackleg of crucifers has been found as an underground disease affecting the roots of brussels sprouts, cabbage and cauliflower in California. Aerial infections have not been observed, however.

Because aerial infections of cultivated crops have not been found, survival of the fungi appears to depend on invasion of underground parts of crucifers that are continually cropped to the land. Observations indicate that once the fungi causing blackleg is introduced into a field with seed or infected transplants, they may persist there indefinitely when crop rotation is not practised.

Seed produced by diseased cultivated crucifers in California is uninfected because of the absence of the aerial phase of blackleg.

The proposal to exempt personal property from taxes is a blow at the California home owner. Of course, we all want less taxes. However, the state, county, city and all political subdivisions must pay their bills, and exempting one class of property will not reduce taxes—merely shift them to some other property. The place to cut taxes is at the spending source. It may be argued that to give the spenders less money to spend will cut their budgets. This may all be true, but why not a reduction on all taxes instead of exemptions here and there?

Political Parade

CLEM WHITAKER, Jr.

Racing hard against the June 29 deadline, petition circulators increased the number to 10 constitutional amendments to go before the California electorate at the November 7 General Election.

The last initiative petition to secure the needed 204,000 plus valid signatures of voters before closing time is the Public Housing Project Law.

The proposed Article XXXIV to the State Constitution, according to its summary of chief purposes and points prepared by the Attorney General, basically would require approval by a majority of the voters in any given county or city as prerequisite for the establishment of any low rent housing project.

In other words, if the Public Housing Project Law is approved by the voters, the only public housing financed in part or whole by any government body that could be constructed would be that authorized by the voters in the county or city in which it was to be built.

Recalling that the people of California have turned thumbs down on every public housing measure to get on the ballot, thus indicating that they would be very apt to approve this measure to give them a chance to vote on all public housing, politicos are watching with more than usual interest to see how the public housing enthusiasts plan to oppose the measure.

In the first place the most confirmed housing zealot will find it embarrassing—to say the least—to say that the people shouldn't have the right to vote on the issue. It's always the left-wingers who are most in favor of public housing who wave the word democracy the hardest.

The best argument against the proposed Public Housing Project Law, of course, would be that it would lead to California losing out on its share of federal grants-in-aid. Even that argument, however, is simply an admission on the part of those who advance it that if the measure is passed the public will exercise the right to turn thumbs down on public housing.

Then, too, federal grants-in-aid aren't the easiest subject in the world to defend whether in regard to housing or any other matter. Many observers are of the opinion that there is a growing opposition to all such grants on the basis that with the giving of each grant, the Federal Government takes its measure of control from the State and individual.

What it boils right down to, politicos chuckle, is that the Public Housing Project Law is one cagey piece of initiative. For all that, the battle promises to be one of the hottest on the ballot. There's every reason to believe that if the measure is successful before the electorate in California it will be adopted elsewhere—and that's something no public housing enthusiast is going to look on with favor.

Talks and Walks With Mother Nature

BY TRIXIE TREGANZA

Some 25 miles to the westward, not visible from Egg Island, and lying low behind the horizon, is a small black speck that upon approach pictures to one the form of a huge hat floating on the surface of the water. This is Hat Island, with three quarters by half mile for its length and breadth, respectively, and rising some 90 feet. Its formation is that of decomposed rock, boulders and sand, portions being well covered with guano; and the vegetation consists only of thorny sage, weeds and grass. Washed upon the rocks and strewn along its beaches are hundreds of poles, the remains of huge rafts of piling torn from their moorings by heavy storms during the construction of the Lucin Cutoff.

Here, as by preordination come two colonies of American Pelican each year, and to dispute this right comes also the California Gull with his quarrelsome and contending nature. This disposition, however, is only shown on his breeding ground, for away from his home he is very peaceful. He is, indeed, the bane of the Pelican's existance, for from the first time their first egg is laid until the last bird is hatched, they are compelled to guard their colonies against the avaricious attacks of the Gulls, who, when finding the Pelicans off guard, swoop down and by repeated pecks crack the eggs and devour their contents.

Probably no more grotesque sight is to be seen than a colony of young Pelicans before they are able to fly. Upon approach they herd together, groping and tumbling, rather upon their wings than upon their legs, the use of which they do not seem to understand. Perhaps this is due to the fact that the Pelican is one of our American birds requiring the longest time to master the art of locomotion. At no time in his life does he ever give evidence of grace in walking. This however, cannot be said of his wonderful flight.

The nest of the Pelican consists of nothing more than possibly a very slight depression scratched in the sand in which are deposited their two to three and rarely four snowy white eggs, usually blood marked.

The nesting of the California Gull on this Island varies slightly from those of Egg Island, only in as much as now and then a slight attempt at nest building was noted, and consisted of a few sticks, weeds and grasses matted together in guano.

Different, here however, is the nesting site chosen by the Treganza Blue Heron. While the boulders are plentiful, these birds seem to prefer the large thorny sage on the hillside which grow to a height of four to five feet, building nests that would cover an entire sage bush, some measuring in diameter five feet, and all being composed of sticks from the sage.

Casual observation would lead one to think that these nests were flimsily constructed for they appear frayed out on the edges. A closer inspection, however, shows that every sttick is carefully placed and has been given a position to remain.

Each year's visit to the Islands indicates that these birds are on the increase, as a count of the nests show many new ones, with

CHAPTER XVI

"No bones broken," said Dr. Crane in a puzzled tone. "Odd that light this way, can't you. He doesn't seem to be hurt; may be a mild concussion, or [illegible] shock—"

"Get him to his room," Dr. Crane said curtly. "I guess he can walk, but he'd better lie flat for a few minutes."

THERE were a few gentle questions from the doctor. "You can't have just fallen down those stairs, man, if you were going up. Your foot slipped? But how did that knock you down half a flight?"

Todd's gaze traveled slowly from face to face. After what seemed a long wait he shook his head cautiously. "I can't seem to remember much," he said, "except that the lights wouldn't work. I'd started up the stairs anyway, so I went on."

"Somebody took the bulbs out," Horace began in his hushed voice.

"But what were you doing?" said Mary Helen shrilly. "Why were you on those stairs at all?"

"Why not?" Todd murmured feebly. His eyelids flickered. "I was in the garden—shortest way from there to my bedroom—"

The others exchanged swift glances. "But what then, McKinnon?" the doctor insisted. "How did you fall?"

"Then—" Todd said, and gazed vaguely into space. "Then—no. It's black. All black." His voice trailed away.

To Georgine all the terror and distrust of the last few days struck inward. She thought incoherently of the hard Tillsit eyes and the Tillsit secrets, of accusations implied and spoken, and the aunt with the reticule in Todd's story, and a door opening when an old woman invited death to enter her room.

"We've got in too deep, she thought in panic. We've started something that's going on inexorably to finish itself, and if we get in its way—

GEORGINE opened the door and looked in. Todd, sitting on the edge of the bed, met her glance and got up swiftly. "Yes, I'm really all right," he murmured in answer to her gesture, hardly a bruise, if the truth were told."

"I gathered something of the sort," said Georgine in a low tone, shutting the door behind her. "A fine performance, chum. 'Black, all black!' Heaven give me strength."

"Dear Georgine, I beg you not to snap your eyes at me." He grinned unrepentantly. "That was the most innocent li'le experiment a man ever made, and I got a fine surprise from it. No, I was not going up to the attic in the dark, sticking my head out for someone to bop me. There shouldn't have been anyone there."

"Well, what were you doing, for heaven's sake?"

"Yes, I'm scared again," she added defiantly. "Good and scared, and I'm in no state to consider logic, Todd, they're trying to keep us here, by one means or another, just so they can get us—as they very nearly got you on the stairs."

"Take it easy," he said tranquilly. "That wasn't as bad as it looked. In the first place, what I was doing wasn't foolhardy. I simply wanted to go up those enclosed stairs without trying to be quiet, to see if the others would hear me and come to investigate. I meant to step out on the second floor, without going near the attic."

"And," he went on levelly, "someone did hear me; someone who was already up there, and knew, that I might come up through that well at any moment."

"But—who? It must have been an outsider, Todd. Horace and Mary Helen were with me every minute, and Nella had just left the room a minute before you yelled. She—she couldn't have got up there ahead of you, could she? Run up the stairs and whisked into the attic at the very moment you choose to start up to the second floor?"

"I don't know for sure." There was a cold gleam in Todd's agate-gray eyes. "All I know is that as I came up I heard a stir at the top of the house, and then something came at me with an almighty great whoosh—shot down those stairs like a bat and knocked me halfway down the flight I was on."

"Knocked you—"

"No, I didn't really fall. You might say I slid down the banisters on my hands," said Todd, silently chuckling. "Knocked my wind out for a minute, and by then I heard the light cavalry charging up the front stairs and it occurred to me to play dead dog. Worked fine, too."

"Did it, indeed. It took a year off my life."

"I SHALL try to restore it, my dear," said Todd gravely. "But consider Nella's solicitude, calling for the doctor at once; it took him a fairish time to get to the 'phone too. Consider how opportune Susie's visit was, and the fact that Horace came down from the second floor to find me, and Mary Helen came up the enclosed stairs from the first floor almost as if I were being hemmed in as that if I'd wanted to chase my giant bat toward the basement I'd have bumped into Mrs. Crane and been headed off. All very rewarding."

"I see. Couldn't have been better if you'd planned it. Todd McKinnon, if you'd lay off these experiments—"

"I give you my word, this wasn't planned."

"All right. But if you got to thinking of yourself as a great detective, after all you've said—"

"No." He frowned a little. "I'm no detective, except that—well, you remember what we said about the transparent mask."

"You know—who killed Miss Tillsit?"

"I think so."

"Well, don't tell me!" said Georgine in a vigorous whisper. "At least not until we're far away." She got up. "I've had enough of this. I want to go home and forget it."

"You're quite right. Why don't you go to bed now, and before you know it it'll be morning and we can—"

"Go to bed? You mean to sleep? Are you crazy? After all these goings-on I'm not even planning to take my clothes off, let alone lie there in the dark."

"I'll be up, if that would help any."

"What for, Todd?"

"If our impulsive friend goes up to the attic again," said Todd deliberately, "he's going to get caught in the act."

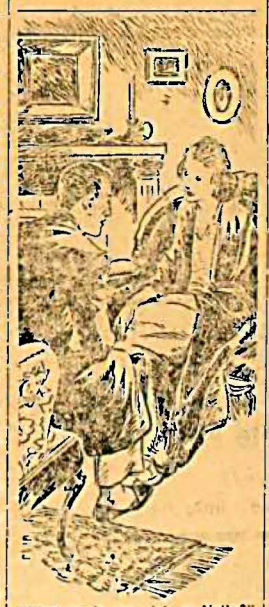
THE sounds of people going to bed diminished and died to silence. It was nearly one o'clock. Georgine peered cautiously into the hall and saw that Todd was already there, on the plush settee by her bedroom door.

"Leave your door open," he said on the barest thread of breath. "Leaves us in shadow and lights up the stairs."

She lowered herself carefully to a seat beside him. When they were together there didn't seem any great danger about this vigil: it felt ridiculous and hollow.

"Are you sure everyone is in?" she said in a whisper as soft as his own.

"Yes; and asleep, I hope."



"What made you pick on Nella?"

"Todd, dear; you made a mistake in letting so much time elapse between our last talk and this one."

"So?"

"Yes. I've had time to think. Will you take me away now?"

"Now?" His smooth head turned slowly.

"Yes. But if we let them know we're going they'll find some way to keep us. I know you want to stay, to—to see things out to a finish. You think something's due to happen tonight. But couldn't we—skip the last act and get out before the crowds? Look, Todd. You said you'd guessed all the answers; but you're not a detective, you're not a policeman, you're not even a private citizen who's seen a crime committed. This is all in the past, the criminal part at least, isn't it? Well then; what do you have to do about it?"

"What do I have to do?" Todd's whisper came at last. "Nothing. I don't know of any way to see justice done. Miss Tillsit's body has been ashes for all of four years, and there is no other proof that a murder was committed."

"And still you want to stay and see this out?"

"No. Not if you want to go this badly. How long will it take you to pack?"

"It's all done," Georgine whispered in a half-sob of relief.

"Then I'll put my coat on," Todd began to ease himself to his feet, "and get the car out of the shed. It'll roll down without my starting the engine." He bent to her ear. "You won't be afraid to stay alone for five minutes? If anything went wrong you could scream, you know."

She heard the front door open and close softly as he passed through, but she doubted that anyone else would have sensed it. She slipped quietly back into her own room, leaving that door open the merest crack, and stood looking round carefully to make sure that everything was packed. She could carry her own bag and Todd's light one, and he could take Barby. With care, Barby should not wake at all. If she should, and they were caught—

She lifted her head and stood gazing incredulously at the wall. The lowest attic stair had creaked.

She could see perfectly. The light illuminated the full lower half of the flight, but there was nobody at all on the stairs.

SHE was sitting on the floor when Todd came back a few minutes later. Her palms were pressed to her eyes and she was saying to herself in a low voice, "I've gone mad. I must have gone mad."

"Georgine, what is it?" He knelt beside her.

"I couldn't scream when I saw nothing at all, could I?" She took down her hands and looked at him dull-eyed. "G-get everyone up just to tell them there wasn't anyone on the stairs but f-footsteps?"

"Wait a minute. What is this?"

"The treads creaked, one after another, and no one was there!"

He was halfway to his feet when she caught at him. "No, Todd! Don't go into that stair well! Please, if I've ever asked you for anything—"

"No, listen to me." She took a deep breath and shuddered once, strongly. "I know that wasn't a ghost, of course. It can't have been. But—it's some kind of trap."

"I'm not so sure." He was still unruffled. "If someone did engineer that special effect, maybe we were meant to think that we had been mistaken all along, that there had never been a living person in the attic. Or, if we didn't believe in ghosts we might convince ourselves that the house made those noises all by itself; you see?"

"Maybe." Georgine murmured, her eyes fixed on his. "But I don't like this human agency any better than the supernatural. Thank heaven, we're packed; we need not waste a minute."

"I'm afraid we must." His arm was steady about her shoulders. "Just before I started to roll the car out I looked at the gas gauge. Somebody's let all the gas out of the tank. And the new coupons aren't good for two more days."

"Can you take it for a few hours more?" he said levelly. "In the morning I'll see what I can do with a few threats."

"I'll have a try at taking it," said Georgine drearily. "There isn't much else to do. You won't go into the stair well? Will you promise?"

"I promise. My poor love, it's about time you had your innings."

She heard him quietly re-seat himself in the hall; she fell back against the pillows, still weak with shock. It would be impossible to sleep. . . .

MORNING sun made the new leaves a gilded green, outside. Barby was climbing into the bed beside her, jabbering about breakfast, and there were voices in the hall.

Horace's soft tones, muffled and booming in the enclosed stairway. "Hey, who left this mop down here?"

"Mop?" Todd was courteously interested.

"Yeah. Wedged into the banisters, right across the stairs. Great God!" Horace sounded aggrieved. "If a fellow had come running down here in the dark, he'd have tripped on it and broken his neck."

Georgine sat up. "Yes, darling," she said in a low voice to Barby, "you get dressed now, as fast as you can. We're going home—ditto!"

"Today? Oh, Mamma, I haven't half finished looking at those old things in the trunks."

"But we must go some time, dearest. You can't stay out of school forever."

"Well—I just wish we could stay a few minutes longer. Maybe if I went up right after breakfast?" Barby suggested with overwhelming charm.

"No, No, Barby. Georgine took her child's shoulder in a firm grip. "I don't want to go near that attic again."

"Oh," Barby turned away. The back of her neck was heartrending as ever, but this time her mother was not softened.

After a polite but rather silent breakfast—"If you really must go," said Nella Peabody, sighing, "I can't tell how guilty I feel about letting you pay anything for staying here."

Todd lighted a cigarette and strolled into the front hall in her wake. "The question of pay," he said gently, "is rather involved; I'll admit. You're an honest woman, Nella, and you have no car of your own."

She turned, the gray eyes wide. "I haven't—"

"So you'd have no use for the gasoline. You're thrifty, too. Don't tell me you poured it all out on the ground?"

Mrs. Peabody's glance fell be-

ELECTRIC TRAPS FOR INSECTS

"Some day you may be able to keep the tomato hornworm and corn earworm out of your fields with electricity—but not yet," advises Farm Advisor Bernarr J. Hall.

Agricultural engineers have been playing with the idea of taking advantage of the moths' attraction to light to aid farmers in controlling them. They discovered that moths are especially enamoured of "black light," which is not visible to human beings. By spotting ultraviolet lamps around corn field, they were able to attract the egg-bearing females, which were killed on electrically charged screens before they had a chance to lay their eggs. The engineers caught 347 tobacco hornworms in one night in a specially devised trap attached to one of the lamps.

Hall warns farmers not to go all out yet in putting lamps and traps into their fields. While they may have certain advantages, they also have many disadvantages, such as the need for installing electric wiring, and the possibility of destroying beneficial insects at the same time. Until the equipment is improved, Hall suggests that farmers rely on their older methods of controlling these pests.

POULTRY PRODUCERS DISCUSS FEEDING

Poultry producers in San Diego County are concerned about summer feeding and management practices. With the high cost of feed poultrymen are interested in growing healthy pullet replacements and maintaining high egg production of the laying. These and other important management practices will be featured at two series of meetings according to Farm Advisor Robert H. Adolph, University of California Agricultural Extension Service.

These meetings are held as a part of the regular Agricultural Extension Service program of work in the field of poultry production in co-operation with the Farm Bureau Poultry Department, open to the public.

Meeting to be held will be as follows:

VISTA LA MESA CHRISTIAN CHURCH
University at Massachusetts
Russell Hensley, Minister
H 6.2217
Sunday, July 2
9:30—Classes for all ages.
10:45—Morning Worship.
"The Church Board Functioning Effectively" was the challenging theme of installation and dedication of the Official Board last Sunday evening. Those installed were: Elders—James Conlee, H R. Huffman, Gilbert Durham, Roy Havens; Deacons—James Wall, Harold Haskins, Paul Myers, Orvin Hawkins, Harry Shadinger, Orth Spencer, Mark Paul, Coleman Hawkins, C. E. DeHoney, Richard Handee, Ray Wellington, Irvine Smith, Robert Harshaw, Dale McCoy, Gregory Boddy and R. W. Sternberg. Following the service, the congregation went to the social hall for an informal period and refreshments served by the Fellowship Class.

The Executive Committee of the Board, elected last week at the annual dinner meeting, will meet tomorrow (Friday) at 7:30 p. m. to select the members of the five functional committees of the church. Executive members are James Conlee and Dale McCoy, co-chairmen; Orth Spencer, financial secretary; Irvine Smith, treasurer; Gregory Boddy, clerk assisted by Roy Havens.

Under leadership of the new officers, the Fellowship Class is holding panel discussions at their meetings at 9:30 each Sunday morning. A white elephant silent auction will be the keynote of the class party held in the church this (Thursday) evening.

Final preparations are being made for the opening of the Vacation Church School next Monday. The registration booth will open at 8:30 and supervised play begin on the playground, before classes begin at 9:00. The theme is "Finding God." There is an adequate staff of trained teachers and workers and children from pre-first through seventh grade (next fall) are welcome to attend. The registration fee is 50 cents.

Three groups of slides will be shown: the first, "Finding God Through VCS," is pictures of work done last year; the second, "Expanding Our Horizons," a preview of this year's work; third, "Finding God Through Brotherhood," work among other peoples.

The Golden Text of the Sunday Bible Lesson on "Sacrament" in all branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, is from the Psalms: "Search me, O God, and know my thoughts and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."

Walks and Talks

no for rent signs on the old houses. The nest of one years standing is very small, measuring not more than 24 to 34 inches, while with each succeeding season a few more sticks are added in the way of rebuilding and housecleaning. It is reasonable to suppose that the larger nests have been used for many, many years, for beneath them lie piles of the decayed vegetation from the ceaseless rotting of their bottoms mixed with the skeletons of hundreds of carp carried there annually as food for their young.

The nests are very beautiful. Even the subtle grey which the sage naturally possesses is further softened and tempered by the elements until they are fairly vibrant in the sunshine.

While the young of the Pelican seem to show great fear at the approach of man and endeavor to escape, this cannot be said of the Treganza Blue Heron. In most instances while being examined they will either lie quietly in the nest or attempt to rise, drawing back their long necks and thrust them forward with a hissing sound. If one is unfortunate enough to receive the thrust of the long sharp bill, they have occasion to remember that distance has its advantages.

Stretching to the southward from Hat Island towards Carrington Island is a long sand bar on which, during the months of June, July and August, the graceful Caspian Tern raises her brood. Their nests consist of a few weeds and grasses matted down in a depression in the sand, and contain two to three eggs of a creamy white ground color spotted and specked with various shades of brown and lavender.

The one other and most densely populated Island is Gunnison, on which breed all of the above mentioned birds with the exception of the Caspian Tern. Its accumulation of guano gives evidence of the ages that these birds have been sole occupants.

The flight from this and Hat Island to the nearest feeding grounds of these birds, the mouth of Bear, Weber and Jordan Rivers, is 30 to 40 miles, and it is here that the Heron, Cormorandt, and Pelican do their fishing. The Gulls trail even farther, some 50 and 60 miles, following the plow of the farmer, hunting crickets and grasshoppers and rummaging amongst scavanger piles. From such distances the food is carried to their young and are fed by regurgitation.

A night spent on these Islands of congested life reveal the fact that even the winged creatures, like all others, must toil from daybreak till dark for their daily sustenance. With the first grey streaks of the dawn comes the mating call of the Waking birds, and the air is astir with the whir of wings as they prepare for the inland flight to their various feeding grounds.

Spectre-like the dull grey forms of the Treganza Blue Heron rise from their nightly roosts, and are silently lost in the duller grey of the early morning. Here and there an indistinct group of white forms moves silently about at the waters edge, a stretching of wings a few flaps of dipping wing tips, and a line of White Pelicans stretching themselves out, the leader with metronomical precision marking time for the alternate wing beats and rests, as they silently steal away into the morning with their easy, firm flight.
